

Bhandariya Jain Temple - Bhandariya - Gujarat (Shree Bhandariya Parswanath Bhagwan)

Para (34)

The oldest Jain temple is found in the Para region of West Bengal. In his book "Bang Sahityer", Shri Prasad Rai Chaudhary has mentioned that Sarak were the locals of the area during ancient times. Remains of temples around 2500 years old are still found in this region. While time has destroyed and deteriorated a number of ancient artifacts here, the surviving temple is still standing as Alok Stambh and demonstrating the rich heritage of the times. Each part of the temple is built with iron rods in the middle, which is different from other temples built by Saraks. This invaluable heritage built by Saraks is almond in color and about 40 Meters tall.

Deulghata (173)

Deulghata, on the bank of the Kangsabati, some 6 km south of Jaypur and about 25 KM from Purulia town, once had 15 temples and some small shrines built around the 9th-10th century.

There are three tall bricks - Deuls with decorated stucco. The other temples at Deulghata, mostly made of stone, have fallen down. All three deuls have triangular corbelled entrances with towers built up by interior corbelling. The corbelled entrance of the southern temple is high and graceful with a delicate curve. All of them have rich curved brickwork with stucco décor. They depict chaityas and miniature rekha motifs. The stucco application includes scrollwork with geese and foliation, and dwarfs familiar from Pala-Sena age art. Floral designs and Jain symbols can be seen on the walls of one of the temples.

Pakbirra Jain Temples (127)

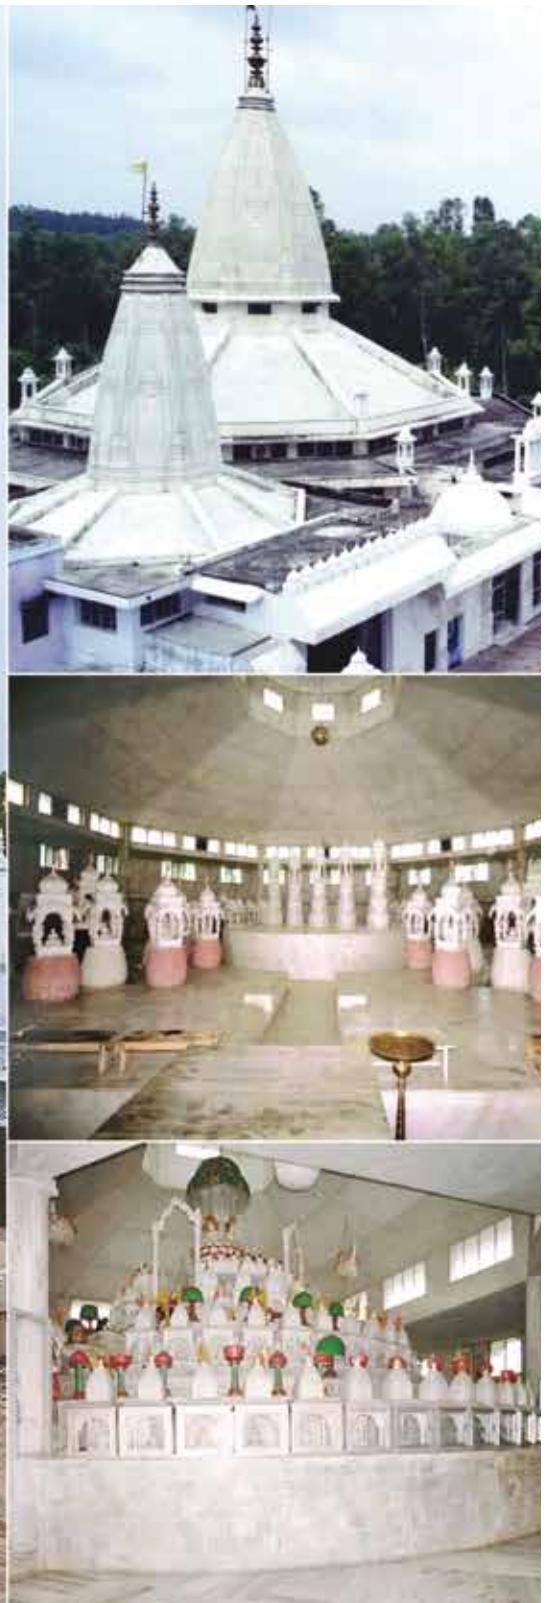

Pakbirra is the proud kshetra of ancient Sarak culture. At present, there are four temples. The first one is made up of almond-colored stones, and there used to be a Chakra on top of it, which is now damaged. The second square temple is also made of almond-colored stones and has Tirthankar idols on each side. The third and fourth temples were excavated recently. Mulnayak Trithankar's pratima is made out of black stone and is worshiped by locals as Mahakal Bhairav. This statue is about 2500 years old, and shows how advanced the Saraks were at stone carvings.

Shantinath Temple - Hastinapur - Uttar Pradesh (Shree Shantinath Bhagwan)

Telkupi (222)

The history of Telkupi in the Purulia district is mesmerizing. There are many idols found here. At present, there are three famous temples here that are built on Barakar architecture. There are two ancient temples, and the third one is on the banks of the Damodar river. It is believed that these temples are built by Saraks.

Telkupi's 1200 year old ruins of the Jain temple, were deliberately submerged under the newly constructed dam by the Damodar Valley Corporation without allowing any scope for documentation or translocation. Telkupi was a major Jain settlement with temples and other artifacts dating back to the 9th century Pāla period.

Mohankheda Jain Tirth - Mohankheda (Rajgarh) - Madhya Pradesh (Shree Adinath Bhagwan)

The Grand Deul at Banda (047)

Banda Deul is about 2200 years old temple in Banda village (also called Deulghera). It is in the Raghunathpur II CD block in the Raghunathpur subdivision of the Purulia district in the Indian state of West Bengal.

There is a temple at Banda, which is described by the Archaeological Society of India as a Rekha Deul of Triratha variety, made of sandstone. The temple is richly decorated, the themes being creepers, scroll work and stylized chaitya window. The Jagmohan part of the temple - the middle tier of a typical Odisha-style three-tier temple, was never completed and the peerless floral designs carved on soft stone on the front façade were badly defaced. The circled crown on the top, known as Amalaka, was also broken. The temple had a mandapa which had largely collapsed. However, eight pillars are still present supporting the cross beams. The temple has a water outlet with a Makara (crocodile) head.

Hastagiri Jain Tirth - Hastgiri - Gujarat (Shree Adinath Bhagwan)

Idol of Lord Adinath at Pakbirra (131)

Rishabhanatha with Twenty-four Jinas is the image is carved out on a rectangular stele with Panch-ratha pedestal having a bull, the lanchama of the mula-nayaka, placed between two crouching lions and flanked by a male and a female devotee kneeling in namaskara. The principal Jina wears an inelegant jatajuta with kesa-vallari falling down the sides of head over shoulders. On either side stand sensitively modeled camaradharas with their left hand in katyava lambita posture and the right holding a fly-whisk. On the edge of the back-slab, on a projected frame, are miniature figures of twenty-four Tirthankaras arranged in six vertical rows, two each on either side of the Mula-nayaka. Like the principal image they also stand in kayotsarga posture with their respective lanchanas carved below each on a small lotus throne. The recessed portion of the back slab reveals a crossbar on which are triangular plaques embellished with kumbhas placed one above the other from which pallavas emerge in a triangular shape.

Chaumukhi (74)

These kinds of Chaumukhis (four faced idols) are found at many places in Purulia district. Each idol is in Kayotsarga Mudra and facing each direction. On the top part of the idol, there are 4 idols in the Singhasan and another 6 idols that are established facing each direction.

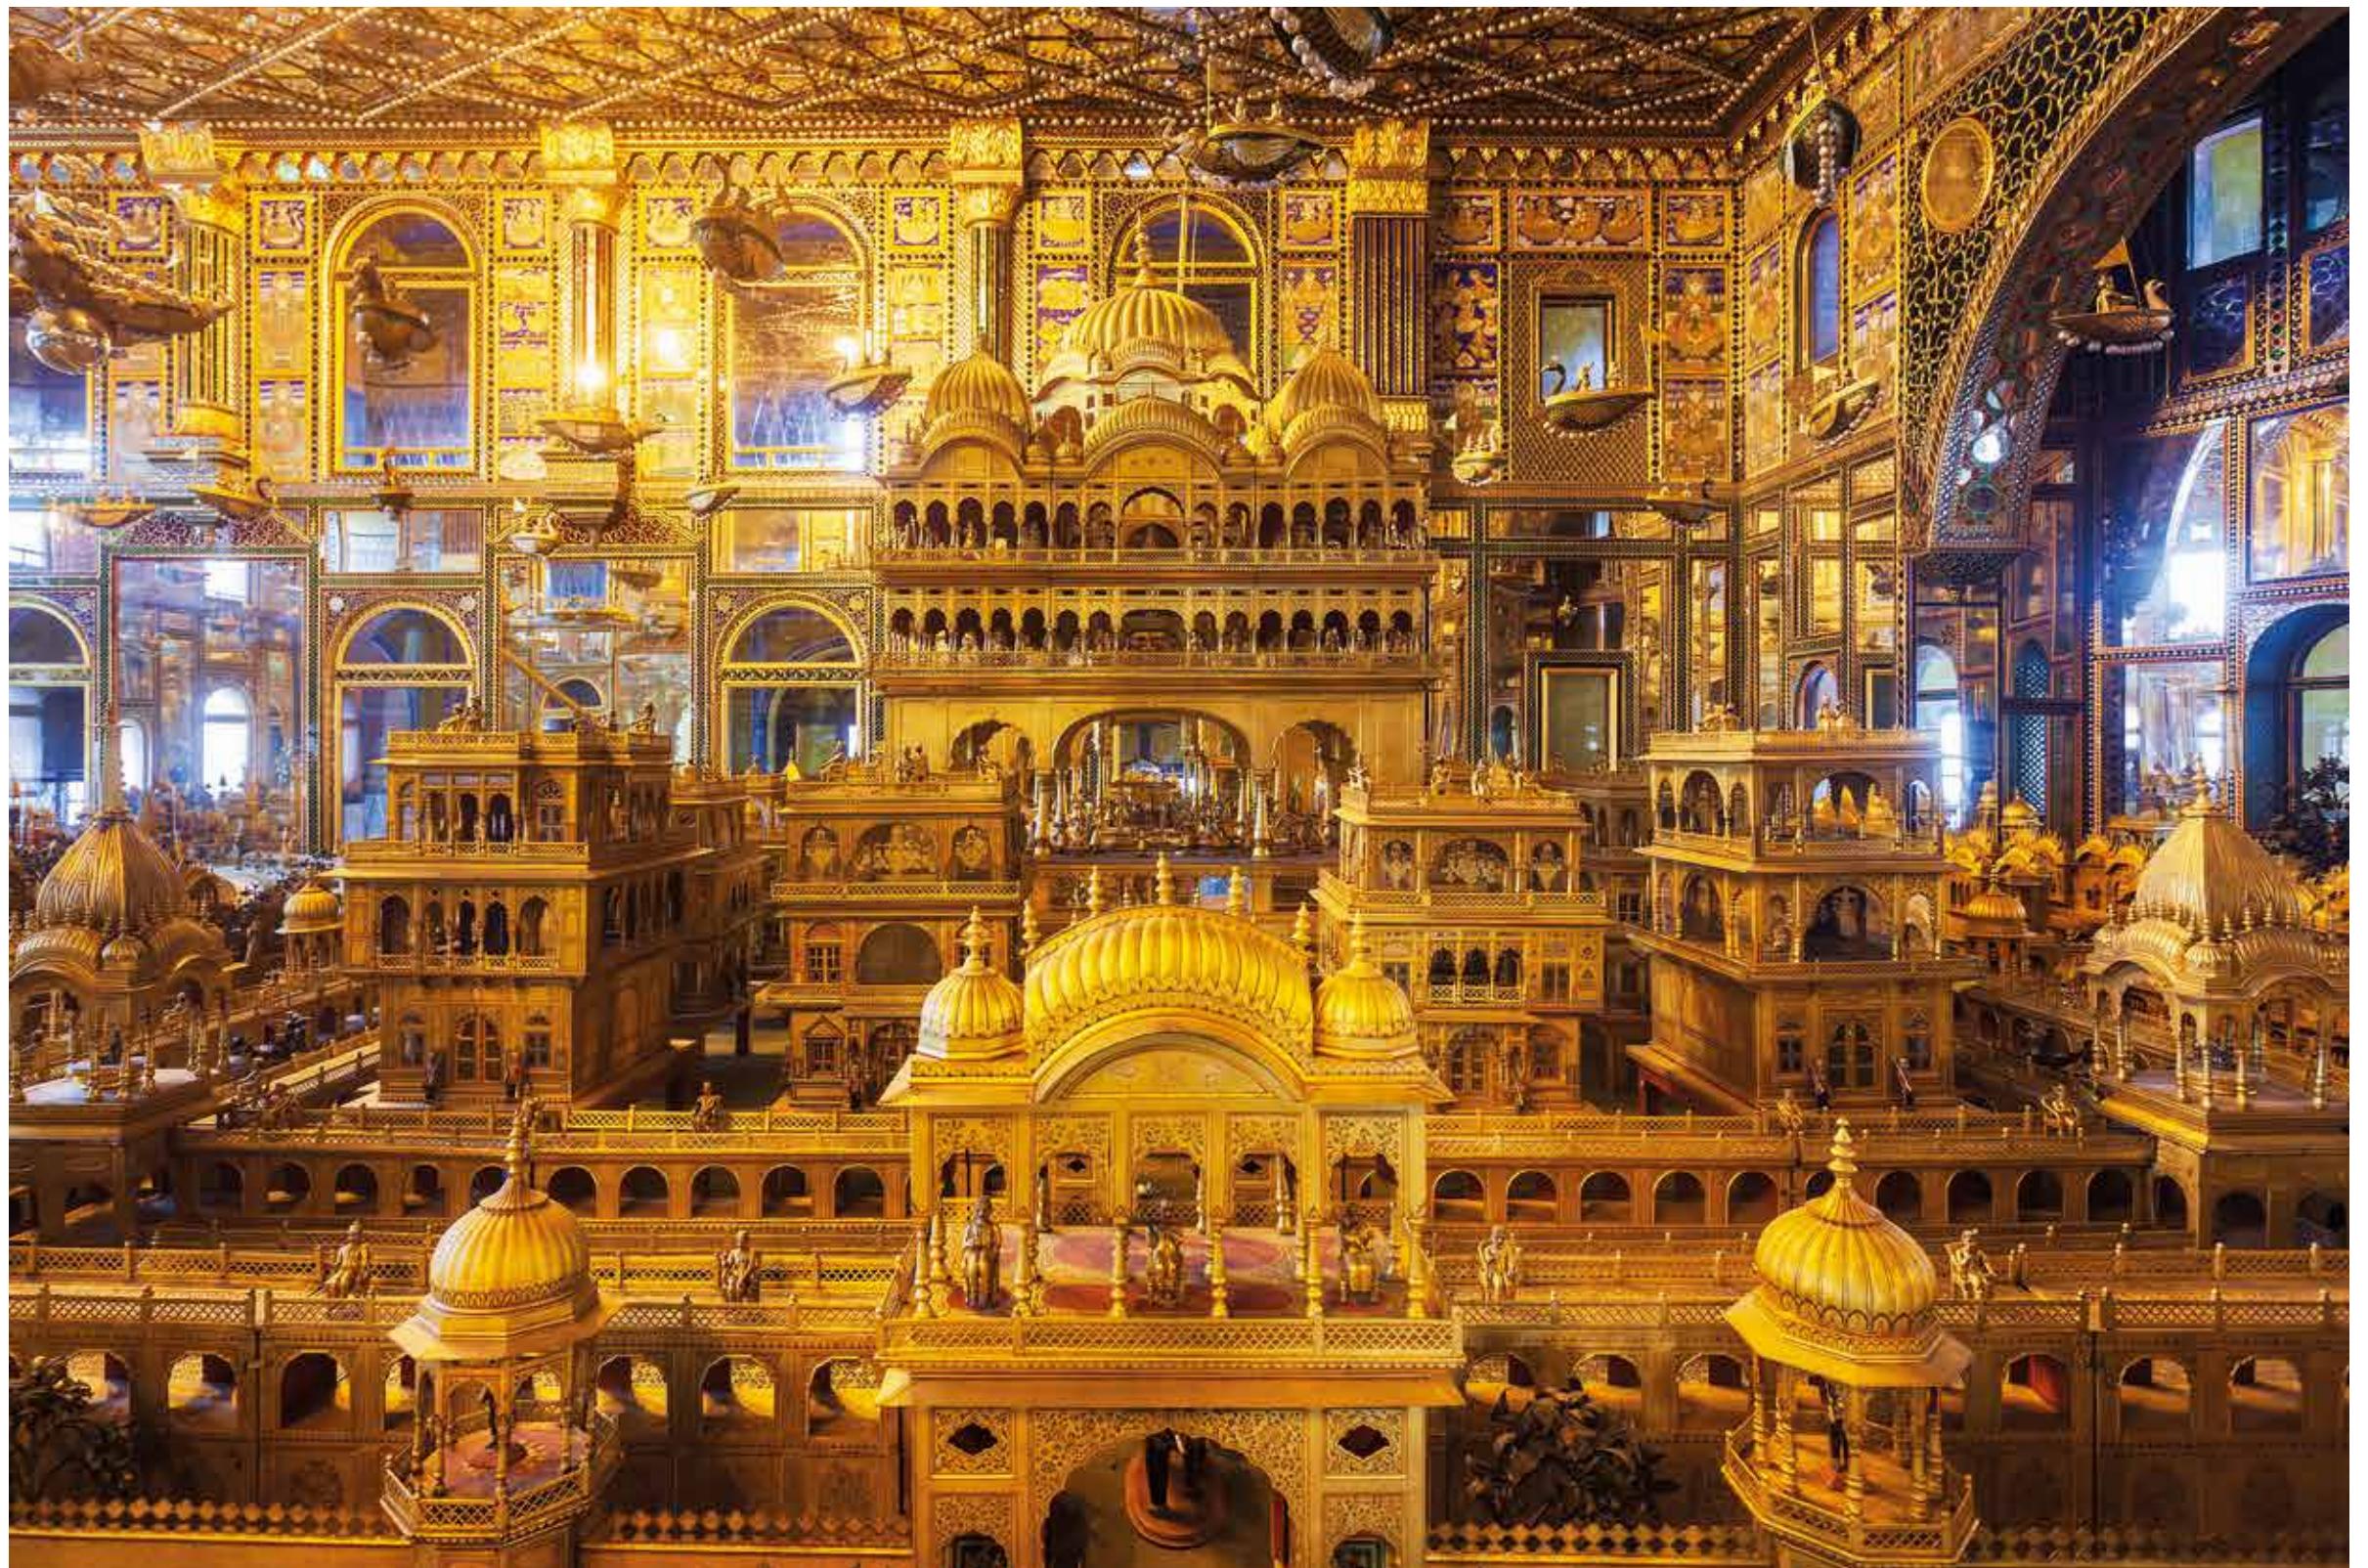

Since ancient ages, the Purulia district of West Bengal has been bestowed with the fortune of being extremely rich in heritage and culture. As mentioned in previous blogs as well, the Ācārāngasūtra, states that Lord Mahāvīra visited a region known as Rādh region shortly after initiation (dīksā), where he had to face numerous calamities. Also, in the Bhagavatīsūtra it has been stated that Lord Mahāvīra spent many 'cāturmāsa' in Panit Bhūmi, which is a portion of Rādh region.

Ambika (75)

Idol of Ambika Devi in Davibhang Mudra. There is a scarf in her left hand which is held by her younger son Prabhanakar at the other end. She is holding a branch of a mango tree in her right hand and standing next to it is her elder son Subhankar. A mango tree and five Tirthankars on Lotus Singhasans are on top. These five Tirthankaras are RishabhNath, Parshavanath, PadamPrabh and MalliNath. The Lanchan of the fifth Tirthankar is not visible anymore. This idol is estimated to be from 7th - 8th century and measures 52.5 X 26.5 cm.

It is evident from the above facts that Lord Mahāvīra blessed the Purulia district region in the 6th century BCE. Further, between the 8th and 12th centuries CE, many Jains, especially from northern and central India started trading by transporting their ships to Bay of Bengal via various rivers namely Damodar, Kangsabati, Dwarkeshvar, Subarnabaluка, and Shilavati which flow through this region.

Pakbirra Padamprabhu (138)

The most significant excavation from Pakbirra was an 8 ft high idol of Lord Śītalanātha/ Padmaprabha standing on a lotus flanked by two celestials with fly-whisks. As the idol is now worshiped as Bhairavnath, a Hindu celestial, the forehead and feet are full of oil and vermillion and a trident placed next to him. Along with the large idol, an idol of Adhisthāyikā Devi was also found which has also been kept next to it. While these ruins recount the glorious past of Jainism, one such village in the Purulia district stands out – Pakbirra. Situated around 50 kms from Purulia town on the Purulia-Pancha road, this village houses a treasure trove for Jains. Pakbirra came into the limelight when a plethora of antiquities related to Jains were discovered along with three temples with unique shape dating back to the 9th & the 10th Century CE. More than 100 years ago, Pakbirra was an open archeological gallery, housing several temples and innumerable Jain statues. Today, after utter neglect only three temples remain standing while several priceless statues are turning into ruins.

Telkupi - Gurudi (202)

The idol of Bhagwaan Mahavir is kept in a new Hindu temple. The local population along with the local authorities and the State Government has named this site as "Bhairav Sthān" and a Hindu temple is being constructed where this idol will be worshiped as Bhairavnath.

Just like other parts of Bengal, Purulia too faced the vicissitudes of time and yet the people from this part responded lively to every cultural event. Jainism had been one of those cultural events and quite interestingly the local people of this region embraced Jainism first and still today they follow certain folk rituals, the origin of which can be traced back to Jainism who are known as 'Sarāk'. Thus, as the Jain influence spread a lot of Jain temples were constructed not only by wealthy traders, but also local chieftains and ministers under the rule of Anantavarman Chodaganga. Today, Jain idols, temples and ruins have been found in hundreds of villages in the

Parswanath (64)

With Cobra as Lanchan and SaptKarna at the head, this idol of Parswanath is in Kayotsarga position. Idols of two Tirthankars at top and Yakshini at the lower side are engraved on this idol.

As per Encyclopedia Britannica, the geographical & historical indicators state that Rādh region is a toponym for an area in the Indian subcontinent that lies between the Chota Nagpur Plateau on the West and the Ganges Delta on the East. Although the boundaries of the region have been defined differently according to various sources throughout history, today it is mainly coextensive with the state of West Bengal also comprising some portions of the state of Jharkhand and Bihar in India.
